WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Houston, Texas- - With the release of its new logo, Ingenium, Inc. is answering the question, "What's in a name?" Ingenium is Latin for "ingenuity." "Choosing this name as our company identity," explains Anu Mahendra, Principal of Ingenium, Inc., "commits the firm to upholding impeccable credentials in innovative, efficient, and resourceful design."

The new logo is comprised of a sequence of two intersecting spheres that suspend the company name. It has been introduced to clients and consultants as a signature of the firm's integrity and professional commitment. It will become the official trademark of Ingenium, Inc. of Houston, Texas as the firm registers it with all appropriate agencies and principalities.

Ingenium Inc. opened in Houston three years ago with a focus on structural systems. The firm brings highly developed technical skills and a wealth of experience to simple and complex structures alike. This applied creativity and knowledge generates greater efficiencies and cost savings in all types of buildings. Today, with more than a dozen significant buildings evaluated and designed with top U.S. real estate development and architectural firms, Ingenium is making its mark on the Houston scene.
